EXPLANATORY NOTE

The Philippine Rise (previously Benham Rise) - a 13-million-hectare undersea plateau around 250 kilometers off the coastline of Aurora province - is touted to have vast natural gas deposits and mineral resources, such as manganese. Estimated to be a much larger landmass than Luzon, Philippine Rise is also the natural breeding ground and habitat for several marine species - making it a prime fishing spot.

Discovered in 1933, Philippine Rise officially became part of the Philippines in 2012 when the UN Commission on the Limits of the Continental Shelf ruled that under the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS), the undersea landmass was contiguous with the country's continental shelf and hence, fell under its exclusive economic zone. In short, it is undisputedly part of Philippine territory.

In spite of the lapse of 9 years since its award, Philippine Rise remains largely unexplored, however. While many champion its immense benefits particularly to the country's energy and food security, the underwater geographic feature needs to be subjected to further scientific scrutiny. Last May 2016, scientists and marine researchers have discovered a vast and pristine coral reef ecosystem in Philippine Rise.

There is a pressing need to scale up and sustain the scientific study and exploration of Philippine Rise. A proper inventory of the undersea plateau would surely prove crucial in crafting a roadmap on how the country can develop and ultimately benefit including as a potential energy source from the dwindling Malampaya natural gas resource. As such, the extensive participation of several government agencies and other stakeholders will have to be coordinated meaningfully.

Hence, we propose that a Philippine Rise Development Authority (PRDA), attached to the Office of the President, as the lead agency in conducting scientific research and exploration in Philippine Rise should be created immediately.

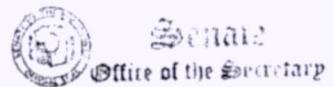

Once equipped with such information, the PRDA shall take the lead in formulating and implementing a development roadmap for Philippine Rise, ensuring that it is aligned with the country's Philippine Development Plan.

As such, swift passage of the foregoing measure is earnestly sought.
